Introduction

The most notable thing I have learned about Swedes so far can easily be described by a single word – cooperation. They work together. On the other hand, I would say the one word that can best describe us Croats is openness. We are receptive. The key to success is achieving a careful balance between those two traits. Bringing cooperation and openness together is a win-win scenario for both Croatia and Sweden.

However, as an accomplished businessman I am aware that governments cannot force people to work together, nor can they define areas of business cooperation. They only create a framework and opportunities that could be utilized eventually. Project 21 is just about that – to bring people from two distant corners of the EU together and to let them recognize the opportunities available.

As it has already been noticed by the Council of European Municipalities and Regions (CEMR), most of public initiatives in Europe are local: Over 60% of decisions taken at the European level have a direct impact on municipalities, provinces, and regions and 70% to 80% of public investments in Europe are made by local and regional authorities. Those two figures alone are proof of the ever-increasing importance of European local and regional government in both our world's economy and the life of our citizens.

Project 21 is designed to encourage local cooperation between 21 counties in Croatia and happened to be the same number of counties in Sweden. The counties are paired according to the best competences their people share. They are matched by a forced-bijection algorithm created for this purpose only. A similar algorithm is used to match 121 events and 2100 companies in both countries (regardless of their counties).

In this paper, all 42 counties are described by knowledge graphs, as an artistic expression of big data. Each graph represents the top 100 skills of citizens from a county that make it most competitive in the world. Such skills (shown in blue letters) are then grouped into red-colored skill-clusters (by modularity, or density) and presented in the form of a network. The dataset used for this research was compiled from a vast collection of publicly available web pages, anonymized, and translated from dozens of languages into English. Entity resolution (categorization) was performed by using Wikipedia data, to avoid synonyms and duplications. The graphs were made by using Gephy, the open graph visualization platform.

This little study is a gift of mine to the Project 21, that I have created as a data scientist rather than a diplomat. Hopefully, it will be found interesting by all who take the time to read it, as well as all partners involved in the project.

Let's start merging our communities by cooperation and openness of our people and success is inevitable!

About the Author

Dr. Siniša Grgić has established himself as a successful and prolific author, researcher, entrepreneur, and diplomat. He currently serves as the Ambassador of Croatia to Sweden, and Latvia. He is an engineer, with a Ph.D. from the University in Zagreb in the field of Social Network Analysis (SNA), and a graduate of Harvard Business School. He has created multiple highly successful startups in Croatia, Slovenia and Germany. Dr. Grgić founded and managed as a CEO for more than a decade, Croatia's first credit reporting agency, which he subsequently sold to a Swedish multinational Bisnode AB (Dun&Bradstreet in Europe). He has applied his knowledge and practical skills as the founder of the Croatian Exporters, Competitiveness Council, European Movement, and Junior Chamber International in Croatia. As author and editor his work includes many well-regarded books. His work across multiple disciplines and advanced big-data skills gives him a unique bird's-eye perspective especially related to international development and trends. He is a proud Croatian and a renaissance European, married and the loving father of three.
